About CAGG-NI

The Computer-Assisted Genealogy Group of Northern Illinois (CAGG-NI), in existence since the early 1990s, is a group of volunteers committed to assisting you in your genealogical research enhanced through the use of computers and other electronic resources.

Information in our monthly electronic newsletter and at our technology-based monthly meetings enables you to keep informed of new technologies and techniques to support your research.

Since our members use a variety of popular lineage-based software packages, we also have additional meetings where software Special Interest Groups get together to identify and share ways to make the specialized software packages more effective.

CAGG-NI's website, <http://www.rootsweb.com/~ilcaggni>, provides you access to our current and historical newsletters, program schedules and meeting location, a database of surnames our members are researching and many other resources including easy access to Research Buzz and Evertons Genealogy Blog.

Our members are knowledgeable on a vast array of genealogy software programs and hardware alternatives. AND, they are willing and capable to provide mentoring on both genealogical and technological issues.

If you are trying to figure out what's new in technology that can support your research; how to organize your email to locate that two-year old message from your cousin; what are GIS, GPS and RSS and how can they help with your genealogy; or, just looking for new friends who share your interest and enthusiasm in family history research — CAGG-NI is the place.
