WHO IS A GENEALOGIST?

GENEALOGISTS are creative individuals who have chosen to take on this pursuit, working at their own rate, and choosing the form it will take. They often meet with others to exchange ideas concerning new references and pitfalls; they share expertise and stories of unusual ancestors they have just discovered. Clues are found in such unusual places, and at serendipitous times that no two tales are ever the same.

GENEALOGY can be a springboard into other careers for those who have leadership skills. Some genealogists lead tours to the countries of origin, taking people to large research libraries there. Some become so adept at using the computer they set up an index service for other seekers. Others become speakers, teach classes, assist with desktop publishing, copy antique photographs, or become certified genealogists who do the searching for a fee.

A GENEALOGIST takes an unwritten oath to be truthful in thought, word, and deed. This means if we write it, it should be because we KNOW and can PROVE it by our references. You never know who may use your charts, and be led astray by the wrong names or dates. So we can be creative in other ways, but not on those charts.
